Dear Governor Tom Wolf,

On our phone call February 1st, you broke the news to me that then-Secretary of the Commonwealth Kathy Boockvar's office had failed to advertise as required the Statute of Limitations for Child Sexual Abuse constitutional amendment.

On that call, you informed me that a complete and thorough investigation would be conducted of this "human error" in Secretary Boockvar's office.

That was six weeks ago.

Finding a human error in any small private business office would take anywhere from an hour to a day. Surely Pennsylvania state government doesn't need six weeks.

My call to the Inspector General's office March 12th provided me with no answer for when the investigation would be completed. On the call between you and me on March 1st, you told me the report would be out in a week or two.

I want to know who or how many people failed in this simple practice to advertise when three other amendments were advertised successfully.

Was it human error or was it part of a bigger effort to once again cover up for institutions looking to protect themselves from the very people individuals of these institutions raped, sodomized, and abused?

I'm yelling to you from the highest peak that I want to be heard for the sake of the victims – not only of the abuse, but the victims of the human error that victimized them again.

Who is responsible?

Sincerely,
